Free College Courses

There are thousands of FREE courses available online in a variety of formats to help offset school costs. Your CAEL academic advisor can help you learn more about free online courseware.

How does it work?

- Check out your options. There are free online courses on PBS.com and from the History Channel. Or go to college on YouTube and iTunes. Even Stanford University offers their courses on iTunes! Don't believe us? Click here.
- Make sure your school will accept College Level Examination Program (CLEP), DSST exams, or Advanced Placement (AP) exams for credit, or will offer you the opportunity to take a challenge exam that they have developed in the topic that interests you. You can also create a learning portfolio to show what you've learned. This might be a great way to combine the learning from several courses, so ask whether this is an option at your school.
- Take the free online course.
- Demonstrate what you learned by taking a CLEP, DSST, or AP challenge exam for credit, or you can submit a learning portfolio for credit evaluation.

College Level Examination Program (CLEP), DSST exams, or AP exams allow students to show expertise in a particular area of study and earn between three and 12 college credits. For example, you could take a free course in American Government from one of the schools listed below, and then take the CLEP exam in that topic. The individual's score will determine how much credit can be granted. To learn more about the CLEP, DSST, AP and other exams, see "Credit by Examination."

Take a free online course today!

- Massachusetts Institute of Technology (MIT) open courseware
- Carnegie Mellon University open courseware
- Tufts University open courseware
- Stanford University open courseware
- UC Berkeley open courseware
- Utah State University open courseware
- University of California Irvine open courseware
- Johns Hopkins School of Public Health open courseware
- University of Washington open courseware
- Courses from the United Kingdom's Open University
- National Repository of Online Courses
- Free courses, language lessons, books, movies and textbooks

© 2011 Starbucks Coffee Company. All rights reserved. For internal use only.